Watch out for the Blizzard
By Peter May

"If you're finding it hard to get Celtics tickets these days, you can scratch your basketball itch by attending a Boston Blizzard game. The Blizzard are the local entry of the American Basketball Association and play home games at the Shelburne Community Center in Roxbury. The Blizzard's principal owner and spokesman is Eggie McCrae, a local phenom (the Globe's Division 3 Player of the Year in 1992) who played collegiately at Texas-El Paso. Also in the ownership group: former Boston College/Ohio State star Scoonie Penn and Randell Jackson, who grew up in Boston, played at Florida State, and had a 28-game NBA career with Washington and Dallas. Among the more familiar names on the Blizzard roster are Steve Hailey, who played at BC, and Kenneth Jackson, who played at Iona. "We try to keep the roster with local players so people can identify with them," McCrae said. The Blizzard opened their season Nov. 3 with a victory over Quebec and hosted the Montreal Royal yesterday. They play the Manchester (N.H.) Millrats this afternoon at Southern New Hampshire University. For information, the team's website is thebostonblizzard.com.
